the two characters, they play every twist, step back and you watch them fight the experiments and the torture. Every move is made in silence and in sadness as you are looking in from a darkness so deep you cannot feel the knife wound in your neck. The experimentations focus on the psychology of childhood trauma and the phobia of water. If you are a beginner on interactive animation I will mention that the character will move individually in front of the camera with a unique animation made by hand, The scene is created in real time during the animating process. As time pass by you discover more layers and features of the environments with objects, textures and elements. The music and sound is made with a piece of vinyl and master tape. This is a in between piece between a project that makes sound and one that make visual art. It uses technique drawn from analog and digital approach such as laser cut, vinyl record scratching, glass slide projectors, texturing and different mixing techniques like dripping and bussing. Currently the game engine is made for 2D viewing but you can hack and play around with it to create 3D. Bugs as of now: *We still have not added vertical view *In some scene, the character will NOT move in slow motion. To solve the problem you have to watch them from left to right. *The sensor is not capturing sound or vibrations. You will need to open the mic, and only then will the position of the character be saved A: A: a. it's a project i started about 2 years ago. a short demo is available here. b. it's inspired by the work of Alan Smithee at gamedev.net. it's not a "game" perse as it just shows a gif of a character breathing. c. it's also inspired by jons brocard's Happy To To To! And other shorts. Family Matters Family Matters is a weekly half-hour family comedy-drama television show that was broadcast on Fridays at 8:00 p.m. (ET) on the DuMont Television Network, from May 30, 1952, to June 8, 1952.
